August Meeting.

The program for next Wednesday's Genco meeting will be a continuation of our open discussion about preparing for harvest, just weeks away, and reviewing the basic process of winemaking from harvest to starting and managing fermentation. Our last discussion was very productive and we had a lot participation and sharing of useful information. There was a wide range of opinions and practices. What is interesting is the way our members approach winemaking is so variable. Some prefer to make their wine using the latest technology, while other prefer a more traditional - low input approach. It shouldn't come as any surprise, though, that the results of either approach are generally quite good, but different, nonetheless. So, if you plan to make wine this season, come and share your experiences, opinions, thoughts, and concerns. Be prepared to participate and ask questions.
